Comcast's blatant and deceptive blocking of peer-to-peer communications is exactly the problem millions of Americans have warned would occur without Net Neutrality protections. The FCC must take serious and immediate action to put an abrupt end to this harmful practice and prevent other Internet service providers from following Comcast's example of discriminating against the free flow of online information. The Internet is a vital engine for economic growth, civic participation and free speech. We simply can't allow corporate gatekeepers to smother these democratic communications by discriminating against new technologies, secretly interfering with Internet traffic and stifling innovation.

This would be equivalent to allowing the telephone companies to decide which phone calls were important, and which were not. It is an atrocious idea that will not help the public in any way, shape or form.

Because Comcast is my Internet provider, I have personally experienced Comcast's blocking of both my receiving and sending emails to friends. Despite the negative publicity Comcast's practice has received, Comcast shockingly is still continuing to block my email and apparently will not stop this unfair practice unless the FCC compels it to do so. For that reason, I ask that the FCC immediately take serious action to put end to this harmful practice and prevent other Internet service providers from following Comcast's example of discriminating against the free flow of online information. Comcast's blatant and deceptive blocking of peer-to-peer communications is exactly the problem millions of Americans have warned would occur without Net Neutrality protections.
